

NEWS BRIEFS

Dolce & Gabbana, Gucci, Kering and luxury real estate – News briefs

October 27, 2014

From left, Stefano Gabbana and Domenico Dolce

By STAFF REPORTS

Today in luxury marketing:

Dolce, Gabbana found innocent

Sign up now

Luxury Daily

Italy's highest court Oct. 24 found Stefano Gabbana and Domenico Dolce not guilty of tax evasion, overturning two previous sentences at lower courts, according to WWD.

Click here to read the entire story on WWD

Gucci's luster fades in tough luxury climate

Over the past few years, Helen Nonini, a 35-year-old executive in Milan, has sold off most of her once-beloved Gucci handbags and accessories. She even got rid of a roomy Gucci travel satchel she received as a gift, the Wall Street Journal reports.

Click here to read the entire story on the Wall Street Journal

Kering and BASF fall as European shares slip back

Shares in luxury goods group Kering and chemicals company BASF fell Oct. 24 after business updates, while new worries about the Ebola virus also weighed on European stock markets, says Reuters.

Click here to read the entire story on Reuters

Creature comforts, à la carte

The uninitiated buyer could be forgiven for thinking that an apartment with a price tag of $10 million, $20 million or much more comes fully loaded with amenities, per The New York Times.

Click here to read the entire story on The New York Times

© Napean LLC. All rights reserved.

Luxury Daily is published each business day. Thank you for reading us. Your feedback is welcome.