Starting later this year, customers can book a private flight with TCS and be taken on a 15 to 20 day tour of a specific destination. The move is an attempt to give customers the luxury treatment while still allowing them to visit places off the typical beaten path.

Luxury destination

Wealthy travelers are used to the experiences provided by traveling to some of the more well-known destinations of the world. There are only so many times someone can travel to Paris, Dubai, United Arab Emirates, Beijing or Milan before they stop truly experiencing something new.

That is the motivation behind a new project from TCS World Travel that will give customers the luxury travel experience in less well-traveled places.

Ranging from 2017 to 2018, TCS will be offering private flights and small groups of travelers trips to off-the-beaten-path locations around India, China, Japan, Canada and the Himalayas.

The trips are all-inclusive and cater to between 12 and 20 travelers at a time.

In this intimate setting, TCS is hoping that travelers will have a better chance to immerse themselves in the local culture and learn about the locations they are visiting, a welcome break from the over-familiarity of popular destinations.

TCS will set the entire trip up for the customer with minimal need for input from them. This squares with recent research that shows that travel agents and travel services are most popular among luxury travelers.

This data comes from Travel Experts' latest "Luxury Travel Trends" report, which took data from the company's database of luxury travel agents. What the report found was that not only is growth expected this year, but that many customers are increasingly recognizing the value of using a luxury travel agent (see story).
