Chasing growth, luxury brands and retailers are stepping up their efforts to benefit from resurgent stock markets worldwide. Yet the underlying worries remain: adjusting to a new digital reality where ecommerce and mobile dominate younger generations' shopping channels of choice, the weakening hold of in-store, experiences over product sales, and globalization under threat from political and terrorist activities. What is the outlook for the year ahead? How should luxury marketers plan to grow without diluting their special sauce?

In this free hour-long webinar on Wednesday, Dec. 6 at 2 p.m. ET, senior executives from the Luxury Institute, will discuss what luxury marketers can expect in the year ahead, how to craft their marketing, retail and media plans accordingly and what left-field surprises to expect, if any.

"Luxury marketers know that the key to sustained growth is nurturing both brand and customer," said Mickey Alam Khan, editor in chief of Luxury Daily, New York. "The coming year will bring its own opportunities and challenges as global events dictate the rise and fall of consumer confidence. Luxury brands must continue their focus on quality and exclusivity even as the siren call of market share beckons."

This webinar is one in a series produced by Luxury Daily to inform and educate luxury marketers on the ins and outs of the luxury business with a focus on marketing, retail, media, digital and geopolitics.
