Here's what a Supreme x Rolex collaboration could look like

After reports emerged that a Supreme x Rolex collaboration could arrive some time this year, Supreme lineups have been deserted as fans are saving every penny in anticipation of the big drop (not really though, it's actually because the season is over), according to High Snobiety.

Back to black? Designers react to the red carpet in the season of Time's Up

As the Hollywood awards season carries on next up, the SAG Awards on Jan. 21 WWD asked designers for their thoughts on the black dress movement: Specifically, reaction to the Time's Up statement made at the Golden Globes, how wearing black should proceed and be perceived throughout the season and if fashion brands, as suppliers (usually gratis) of the fashion statement are getting their due.

Edward Enninful on how his career has shaped #NewVogue

On Jan. 18, Edward Enninful addressed students of the Cond Nast College to share how his career has shaped his editorship at Vogue. From joining i-D at 18 to working under Franca Sozzani at Italian Vogue and Anna Wintour at U.S. Vogue, and transforming the way W told stories with Stefano Tonchi, here he recounts the journey and highlights that led to "the ultimate step": editing British Vogue.
