The campaign follows a woman, Chlo muse Ariane Labed, as she travels across California from Los Angeles to Palm Springs. A separate campaign film sees Ms. Labed exploring South Asia, emphasizing the roaming, globetrotting inspiration for Nomade.

Nomade

Chlo's Nomade fragrance, as its name implies, is meant to invoke a sense of restless thirst for travel and adventure.

The surrounding campaign materials have highlighted this effect thanks to a focus on traveling around the world to exotic locations and meeting new people.

For the social aspect of this campaign, Chlo tapped its muse, French actress Ms. Labed, to star in a series of Instagram posts chronicling a road trip across California.

The first post in the series is a video of Ms. Labed exploring the desert, while subsequent posts show her meeting with other women and further exploring California's scenic but desolate expanses of arid landscapes.

She meets up with indie rock band Warpaint, and the group performs outdoors in the sunlight surrounded by palm trees.

Eventually, Ms. Labed arrives in Palm Springs to finish her journey with Nomade.

Simultaneously, Chlo released a similarly-themed campaign film also featuring Ms. Labed that saw her exploring the exotic locations of South Asia, riding horses and motorcycles, exploring old castles and meeting some of the locals.

Both campaigns, while set in vastly different areas of the world, evoke the same feeling of restless exploration through repeated visual motifs and similar color palettes.

Globetrotter

Nomade was formerly exclusive to LVMH-owned beauty retailer Sephora's Web site before a worldwide launch in-store this month.

Developed by perfumer Quentin Bisch, Nomade has notes of oak moss, mirabelle plum and freesia to create a "the feeling of escape"

For the bottle, Chlo drew inspiration from its popular Drew handbag style, sharing the purse's O-shaped curves. The glass is a rosy beige, allowing light to filter through while the cap is sealed with a flowy pink ribbon and knot (see story).

Most recently, Chlo introduced its new creative director's debut campaign for spring/summer 2018 in seven takes.

Natacha Ramsay-Levi started at the Parisian house April 3, and her first collection for Chlo was presented in September during Paris Fashion Week.

Now, to introduce the collection on a wider scale, Chlo has created a video campaign featuring nearly a dozen models dressed in pieces from Ms. Ramsay-Levi's first collection (see story).

The free-wheeling vibe and desert setting are both themes Chloe has explored in previous campaigns. For instance, in October, Chloe recruited Haley Bennett as the face of a campaign, which looked to embody a woman on "her unique path and owning her destiny." Through the freedom of a convertible, Chlo depicts a life of independence through film and photography.

Set to the free-spirited but relaxed sound of the song "Gimme All Your Love" by Alabama Shakes, the actress is shown driving through the dessert with her blouse and hair blowing in the wind (see story).

The same theme of a woman traveling and discovering herself in the desert is continued in the Nomade campaign.
