How Korea became a lifeline for cool young designers everywhere

Charles Jeffrey, the London designer whose star is on a precipitous rise, arrives at Boon the Shop in Seoul's hilly Gangnam district. He's here for a staff training, to be translated by buyer Munju Yeon, and he doesn't disappoint with his painted Mozart face and tartan kilt, standing head-and-shoulders above everyone else in his stacked Loverboy platforms, writes Business of Fashion
