Capturing the Wealth and Attention of Women

Women in the United States currently account for $14 trillion, or 60 percent of personal wealth nationwide. Their total wealth will grow to $22 trillion by 2020. Factors contributing to this growth include their own income generation as well as transfer of wealth twice from their parents as well as spouses. Yet not much is being done to cater to the financial needs of women. What is the intersection of financial empowerment and women's empowerment? An asset manager managing billions has some answers.

Alli McCartney, managing director for wealth management, Alignment Partners, UBS Financial Services

12:30 p.m. 1:15 p.m.

Sponsored Lunch and Networking Break

1:15 p.m. 1:45 p.m.

Who Is the Woman Luxury Consumer?

Digital disruption is the No. 1 worry of all luxury marketers. But the use of technology has been eagerly embraced by consumers who prefer the convenience of online, mobile and social shopping to the detriment of store visits. The growing popularity of online retail platforms such as Net-A-Porter, Farfetch, MatchesFashion, Rent the Runway and Moda Operandi is proof that women are shaping the future of luxury fashion, jewelry and beauty care, if not other sectors. So who is this new convenience-seeking, self-gifting consumer, what does she want and where is she going?

Suzanne Hader, chief marketing officer, John Hardy

Alison Karp, executive director for L'Equipe L'Oreal, Wavemaker

Poupak Sionit, chief marketing officer, Glamsquad

Kristie McGowan, director for global luxury and management, North Carolina State University's Poole College of Management

Moderator: Marie Driscoll, principal, Driscoll Advisors

1:45 p.m. 2:45 p.m.

Conversation

What Were We Thinking?

An intern pitches her supervisor to launch their own agency in the dot-com heyday. No dice. She tries again and goes and registers the company. Once all in, the two partners set the course for a fashion and luxury agency. The firm now handles marketing strategy, social, public relations and special events, among others, for leading luxury brands across continents. They followed their heart. Best to hear them say it.

Carrie Ellen Phillips, partner, BPCM

Vanessa Weiner von Bismarck, BPCM

Luxury Education Foundation Panel

Luxury and Millennials: How They Are Shaping the Landscape

Most luxury brands are consumed with the direction that millennials are taking them. Words tossed around, with some evidence backing the trends, are experience seeking versus possessing and digital natives as opposed to store visitors. Ethical sourcing is a key screener for purchasing. So how do luxury brands get the balance right? Is it a permanent shift with this demographic or simply a life-stage? Do demographics even matter, or should the focus be on mindset?

Jodie Chan, director of marketing and communications, Altuzarra

Leila Jalai, vice president of retail planning and replenishment, Este Lauder

Deirdre Major, president, Americana Manhasset

4:45 p.m. 5:30 p.m.

Trends in Luxury: How Brands and Retailers Should Adapt

The luxury business is not immune to the winds of change buffeting markets worldwide. The rapid adoption of online, mobile and social tools for shopping and buying, fewer store visits, more regulatory compliance on data and marketing, finding, training and retaining talent, and strains of repeatedly upgrading technology are issues that keep marketers awake. How are consumers and technology shaping the future of luxury and what should brands do to stay competitive and relevant?

Maz Zouhairi, former CEO for North America, Lalique

Milton Pedraza, CEO, Luxury Institute

Jennifer Laddy, global corporate sales manager, MarieBelle

Rania Sedhom, founder/principal, Sedhom Law Group
