LVMH, in partnership eyewear manufacturer Marcolin, has dedicated a mission to beefing up its eyewear category. Stronger collaborations, better production and quality customer service are the mission states of the company named Thlios, which is launching a new Web site and headquarters building.

Eyewear development

Luxury conglomerate Mot Hennessy Louis Vuitton entered into a joint venture agreement with Marcolin for Thlios, as it looks to take a more active role in the management of its branded eyewear lines.

As part of the agreement, valid from last year, the joint venture began producing Louis Vuitton and Cline eyewear this year. LVMH's deal with Marcolin aims to make the company its preferred eyewear partner, which may be a blow to the owners of licenses for other LVMH brands (see more).

Other LVMH brands such as Loewe and Fred have been added to Thlios' portfolio.

Thlios is now debuting a new location dedicated to high quality production for the eyewear brands. Manifattura Thlios, the new location, opened in Italy on April 24.

The factory "forms a complete and flexible production tool that ensures integral product monitoring, from the initial creative brief to the 3D design, prototyping and final production," says LVMH.

Manifattura Thlios

"Italy is a strategic country for the LVMH group," said Toni Belloni, group managing director of the LVMH group, in a statement. "The Manifattura Thlios is proof of the high investment the group has in favor of Italian economic heritage and its development."

The building has been designed with sustainability in mind, with more than 2,300 solar panels installed on the roof.

"With the Manifattura Thlios, we aim to anticipate the future while showcasing our long-standing expertise," said Giovanni Zoppas, chairman and CEO of Thlios, in a statement. "This project combines our taste for top quality products with our respect for a cultural heritage essential to the region."
