Antonio Burrello exits Salvatore Ferragamo

In the wake of the management changes at the Salvatore Ferragamo Group, Antonio Burrello is exiting the Florence-based firm. He had joined Ferragamo as group marketing and communications director in January 2017. Burrello had been tapped by former Ferragamo chief executive officer Eraldo Poletto, who left in March and is now helming Stuart Weitzman, said Women's Wear Daily.

Menswear in vogue for luxury brands with designs on growth

Luxury brands are raising their game in menswear, which is expanding at a faster clip than women's clothing as styles loosen up and streetwear like hoodies find a new audience. Big fashion houses including French conglomerates LVMH and Kering are among those hiring eye-catching designers and investing in male attire, according to Reuters.
