The group has acquired CastaDiva Resort & Spa, which will reopen in spring of next year as Mandarin Oriental Lake Como. While the group has a location in Milan, this will be its first resort in Western Europe.

Italian expansion

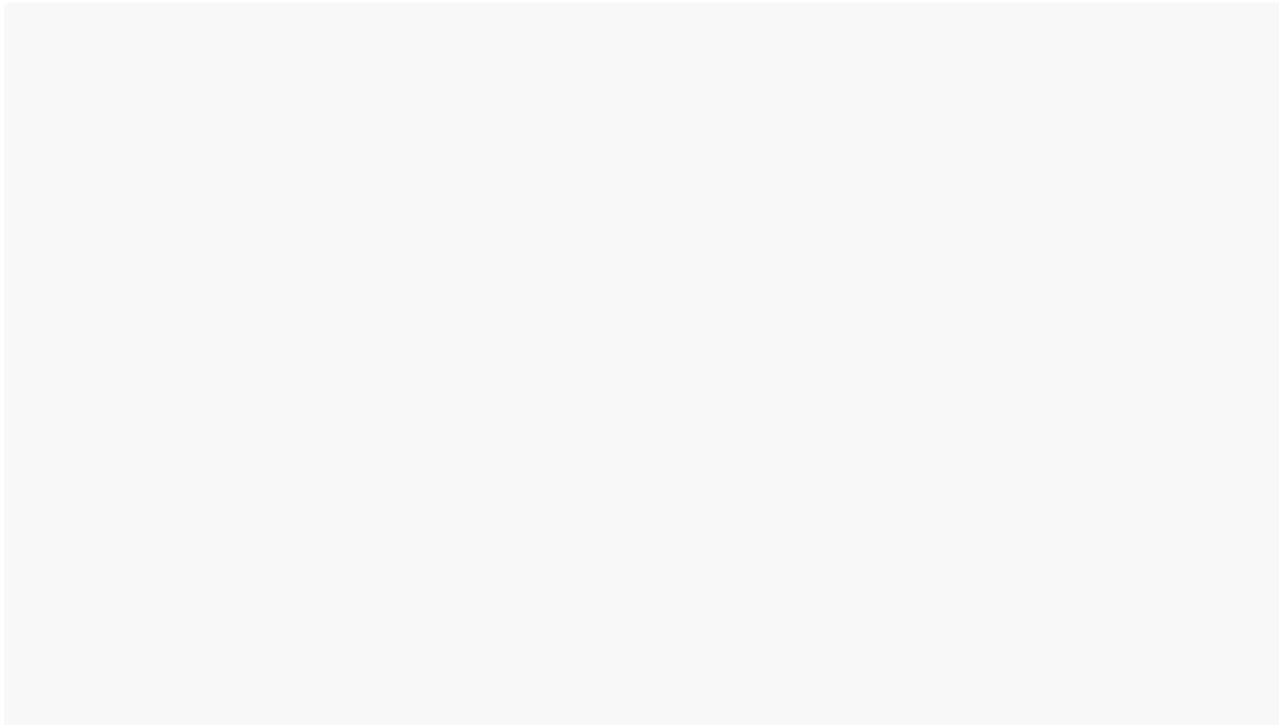

Mandarin Oriental's new location is comprised of 76 rooms in nine villas, two of which can be booked in their entirety for a group.

It also has four restaurants and bars with a lakeside terrace and indoor pool as well as a place to float in the lake.

Scenic views, hiking trails, boating and other water activities are also available on the lake.

"We are delighted to be extending the Mandarin Oriental brand to the shores of Lake Como, which has long been a destination of choice for luxury travelers," said James Riley, group chief executive of Mandarin Oriental Hotel Group, in a statement. "We look forward to bringing the group's exemplary service to the resort and to working with our partners to create one of Italy's most exclusive properties."
