Burberry and Vivienne Westwood have taken their very different styles and created a limited-edition collection that still embodies their British heritage. The collection has dropped today after being announced earlier this summer and is available on Burberry's Web site.

Trendy and traditional

The brands announced they were entering a partnership emphasizing their heritage in July, and surprised some as the two have contrasting styles.

Vivienne Westwood leans more towards a punk rock style while Burberry is known as far more traditional. The collection comes from Burberry's new chief creative officer, Riccardo Tisci, and marks the designer's first collaboration for the brand (see story).

Iconic 70s punk pieces from the Vivienne Westwood label are available in the famous Burberry vintage check, imprinting its traditional pattern onto street-wear pieces. The unique collection excites fashion fans across the board.

The collaboration is also working with non-profit organization Cool Earth in an effort to fight against deforestation. The non-profit works to stop this and its impact on climate change.

Proceeds from the limited edition will support the non-profit.

Select Burberry stores will also carry the line in addition to its dedicated Web page while the collection lasts.
