Topics under discussion include the state of luxury in 2019; digital's impact on advertising, marketing, media and retail; transitioning heritage brands to a new century and new customer; how print media and advertising should adapt and remain relevant; the happy melding of art and online; how the Internet still has its mojo; acquiring and retaining online and mobile customers; luxury property's outlook; and digital advertising's accelerated growth and nab of share from other media.

The program also covers the evolution of affluent consumers' values; what customers want, how and why; which personalities to watch in 2019 who will shape the business; where rental luxury will drag the rest of retail; digital disruptors within luxury; and the correct way to measure customer experience across all channels. The day will be rounded off by best-practice tips from experts on training store associates, go-to-market strategies for new luxury brands, navigating the discount-ridden online retail environment, and how best to crack the United States market for luxury goods and services.

Fireside Chats

Town & Country: Class and Media in the 21st Century

A heritage brand with a dedication to a life well lived, Town & Country strives to refine, instruct and amuse its readers through an ever-evolving dialogue. As the lifestyle authority to good taste, T&C provides a clear lens into the historical significances of the past with a deep responsibility to inform and influence the present. In this modern era, how have the tastes and lifestyles of the uber-affluent evolved? What do these changes mean for the brands that serve the luxury market? And how have media brands emerged to better serve the demands of the luxury advertiser and clientele?

Jennifer Levene Bruno, vice president/publisher and chief revenue officer, Hearst's Town & Country

Artsy: Discovery, Trust and Transparency in Art Transactions Online

Backed by bold-faced names such as Larry Gagosian, Wendi Murdoch, Dasha Zhukova and members of the Rockefeller and Acquavella families, Artsy has become the go-to digital platform for information and sales of art across schools and ages. Galleries, collectors and auctioneers rely on Artsy for the purchase and sale of paintings, sculptures, photographs, prints and film ad video work. How is Artsy working with luxury brands and retailers and art fairs? How has the market changed for both buyer and seller? Are there parallels with other luxury sectors?

Sebastian Cwilich, cofounder and chief operating officer, Artsy

Nina Lawrence, chief revenue officer for content, Artsy

In conversation with Mickey Alam Khan, editor in chief, Luxury Daily

10:30 a.m. – 11 a.m.

Keynote

Back to the Future: Why the Web is Still the Next Big Thing

Thirty years ago, the Web was the next big thing, but the vision for a great user experience was ahead of its time. Now the Web feels tired, even somewhat cumbersome. By addressing these problems head-on, users are having a better experience on the open Web. But there is still more work to be done. In a tech climate that is looking towards artificial intelligence and all things mobile, the Internet still remains the gateway to the world economy.

Adam Greenberg, global product partnerships, Google

11 a.m. – 11:30 a.m.

Research Keynote

Forrester: How to Win, Serve and Retain Digitally Savvy Luxury Consumers

Luxury consumers are digitally savvy early adopters with high brand expectations, even more so than mainstream consumers. Despite much activity over the past year, luxury brands still have lots of ground to cover to create the exceptional omnichannel customer experiences that their luxury customers expect. How should luxury brands re-orientate around the customer, over products and channels, to successfully attract serve and retain ever more empowered customers? Other points under discussion are:

- How technology is empowering consumers and changing their attitudes and shopping behavior
- What luxury brands are doing to chase digitally mature luxury consumers
- What luxury brands must do to compete in an omnichannel retail landscape?

Michelle Beeson, retail analyst, Forrester Research

11:30 a.m. – 12 noon

Panel

Getting Real: Property Retailing and Sales

Luxury property sales have ridden a wave of stupendous growth over the last few years. New developments with apartments in the eight figures and grand houses fetching prices that stretch the imagination were routine. Now, as stock markets around the world wobble and markets such as China and the European Union post slower growth, the search for international buyers gets more intense. Even getting domestic demand up takes more sweat as properties linger longer on the market. What is going on with the luxury real estate seller and buyer? What is working and what is not? What is in fashion and what is out?

Stephanie Anton, president, Luxury Portfolio International

Laura Brady, CEO, Concierge Auctions

Susan de França, president, Douglas Elliman Marketing Development

Facebook/Instagram: Luxury Lift: Role of Social to the Refined Consumer

Facebook and Instagram are leaders in luxury advertising in social media, helping brands define their digital identity and posture to customers and prospects. Luxury consumers turn to these platforms during their entire journey from discovery and inspiration, to shopping and purchasing. This session will explore the ways in which luxury brands can connect to their audiences with curated and hyper-relevant content. From visually stunning imagery to virtual white-glove service, it will explore ways to put the customer's needs first while generating real business success.

Karin Tracy, head of industry for beauty, fashion and luxury retail, Facebook, Instagram and Messenger

Team One: Transformation from the Inside Out: Findings from the Global Affluent Tribe Study

How do five key values – mobility, success, status, belonging and consumption – continue to evolve and what does it mean for luxury marketers in the year ahead as they grapple with unprecedented change in their sourcing, manufacturing, marketing and drive for exclusivity and authenticity?

Joanna Young, managing director of strategy, Publicis Groupe's Team One

2 p.m. – 2:30 p.m.

What Does Your Customer Want, How and Why?

As millennials enter key earning years, are they turning more into baby boomers and Gen-Xers, or is the drive to experience over possession of luxury goods permanent? Is Gen Z a clone of the millennial demographic? Do demographics even matter anymore? Do sustainability and philanthropy still have their ring of authenticity and pulling power? What will drive consumers to make the buying commitment in key luxury sectors such as apparel and accessories, beauty care, watches and jewelry, spirits, automotive and hospitality?

Rémy Martin's Louis XIII

Sharing is Scaring? What the Growth of the Rental Luxury Market Tells Us

Every expert worth their salt has been advising luxury brands to keep their eye on "experience" and the rental trend – all supposedly driven by millennials. What is clear, though, is that affluent younger generations may not be into ownership of product – at least in certain categories – as much as their parents or grandparents. Smart luxury brands have latched on to this sentiment and launched retail brands in fashion apparel and watches and jewelry. What will rental luxury growth's mean for established retail models and brands who thrive on rapid product sales? How are consumers redefining ownership in luxury?

Trisha Gregory, cofounder and CEO, Armarium

Brooke Magnaghi, creative director, Flont

Moderator: Mickey Alam Khan, editor in chief, Luxury Daily
