Opening Keynote

Meet America's Most Powerful Consumer: Her Name is HENRY

The most powerful and empowered income segment currently are those consumers in the $100,000 to $250,000 range, which represents about 25 percent of the nation's 130 million households. This group is called the HENRYs high-earners-not-rich-yet. They make only about one-fourth of all U.S. households, but account for some 40 percent of all U.S. consumer spending $3 trillion. If women control 80 percent of U.S. household purse strings and HENRYs command 40 percent of all dollars spent in the economy, then HENRY women currently represent the single most important consumer segment in the economy, accounting for $2.4 trillion in spending power. By contrast ultra-affluent women household income of $250,000 and up collectively have only about $600 billion in spending power. This session will reveal what HENRY women demand and desire as luxury consumers, with a special emphasis on the young millennial women in that segment defined by gender and income.

Pamela N. Danziger, president, Unity Marketing

8:45 a.m. 9:30 a.m.

Marketing to the Affluent Woman Consumer

Straight-up marketing will not just do to attract the affluent woman consumer to spend more with a luxury brand or experience, or even give it a shot. As Instagram, Facebook and influencer marketing supplant the clout of print advertising and content, luxury brands are forced to deal with a new reality: the old media-buy model is dying. So what type of advertising, marketing, communications and content appeals to the hyper-connected and superbly informed affluent woman consumer?

Patricia Clark, senior vice president for affluent syndication, Ipsos Affluent Intelligence

Rachel Butler, content manager, Crown & Caliber

Cheryl Dixon, vice president of communications and PR, Coty, and adjunct professor, Columbia University

Cara David, managing partner, YouGov

Moderator: Mickey Alam Khan, editor in chief, Luxury Daily

The Power Discussion

Evolution of Luxury and Self

Pioneering women who continue to shape the future of luxury through constant innovation, inspiring leadership and personal development share their love for the business, their unique journey and their outlook on key trends. How did they get their start and navigate their careers, then make the adjustment from player to coach and employ the power of mentorship? What explains the rise of services as the preferred tool and differentiator for luxury brands? Why are more luxury brands seeking partners for customer acquisition in the appeal to millennials with streetwear and high-street-brand collaboration?

Lisa Holladay, vice president and global brand leader, The Ritz-Carlton, St. Regis Hotels & Resorts, Ritz-Carlton Reserve and Bulgari Hotels & Resorts

Marigay McKee, founder, MM Luxe Consulting, managing partner of Fernbrook Convergence Fund and former president, Saks Fifth Avenue

Amina Belouizdad, chief commercial officer, The Private Suite, a TPG-backed company

Moderator: Anastasia Seeböhm, global CEO, Quintessentially

Building a Modern Beauty Brand

If there is a sector that is thoroughly undergoing transformation, it is beauty care. Affluent consumers have grown more sensitive to ingredients and are demanding more skin-friendly options that are green and sustainably made. This has opened the door to more clean beauty brands whose appeal is immediate to millennials and even the generations before them. So how to build and sustain these modern beauty brands?

Elana Drell Szyfer, CEO, ReVive Skincare

Sherry Baker, president of marketing and product development, European Wax Center

Kelly Kovack, founder/CEO, BeautyMatter

Moderator: Rebecca Miller, principal, Miller&company

4:30 p.m. 5 p.m.

How Ethics Play Into Purchasing

Consumers' ethics are increasingly driving purchase decisions. Shoppers expect brands' values to align with their own. Not surprisingly, established luxury brands are taking a hard look at their supply chains and sourcing practices. Consumer activism has birthed eco-conscious skincare brands, jewelers who proudly state their use of conflict-free diamonds and home textile brands with a transparent supply chain. Experts state the case.

Marcella Cacci, founder/CEO, One Ocean Beauty

Anna-Mieke Anderson, founder/CEO, MiaDonna

Missy Tannen, founder/head of design and development, Boll & Branch

Moderator: Marie Driscoll, managing director, Coresight Research
