Reges, a Luxury Collection Resort & Spa in eme will open as the brand's third location in Turkey but the first in the city. With two buildings designed to look like a crown when viewed from above, the resort is open now and features 93 guest rooms and 11 suites.

Luxury in Turkey

Luxury Collection has tapped into the local culture for the architecture in the new location, with the fanning out of the building based on an ancient Sufi ritual.

"eme is a breath-taking Turkish resort town that overlooks the glistening Aegean Sea, and its natural beauty and offerings, including clear waters with unparalleled diving sites, make this a truly special location for The Luxury Collection's third hotel in Turkey," said Anthony Ingham, global brand leader at The Luxury Collection, in a statement. "We are thrilled to uncover this hidden treasure for our global travelers who are sure to develop a deep connection with this remarkable destination."

Culinary experiences at the resort feature Safran, a restaurant focused on local ingredients and contemporary pan-Asian kitchen Hermera. The location will also host a variety of wine tasting grape harvesting experiences and olive oil tasting indigenous to the local area.

The concierge team is responsible for a number of other local experiences such as curated tours of eme Castle and the Alacati Windmills as well as a tour of nearby Ephesus.

Reges also includes a 4,593-square-foot spa as well as two swimming pools with indoor-outdoor cabanas and a private beach. The resort also features various meeting rooms with state-of-the-art technology.

Marriott International's The Luxury Collection recently opened its first property in the English countryside, as an 18th century mansion gets a new life as a hotel.

The Langley, A Luxury Collection Hotel, Buckinghamshire, is situated in Langley Park outside of London. With a lengthy history, this marks the first time the home is being used as a hotel (see story).
