The beauty business comprising fragrances, skincare, haircare and personal care grooming products and services is beset with change from all directions.

Top among the disruptors are enterprising niche labels challenging the status quo, emerging business models for retail such as subscription boxes, direct-to-customer ecommerce and pop-up stores, collaborations with influencers, enhanced inclusivity measures and, perhaps most important, conscious consumerism.

Not surprisingly, established cosmetics marketers are fighting with everything they have got in their arsenal, including imitation. Their affluent consumer base demands a sustainable, ecofriendly approach to anything that touches their skin wellness is the name of the game.

In this free hour-long webinar hosted July 10 at noon ET (New York time) by Luxury Daily, panelists will discuss: What factors are motivating consumers in their purchases of beauty products?

What is the sine qua non for luxury beauty brands to succeed in today's market in product, service and marketing?

Business models that are emerging that challenge the status quo and their staying power

Fragrance, cosmetics and beauty brands that are getting it right

Best-practice tips for beauty brands to survive and thrive into the next decade

Panelists:

Dimitri Katsachnias, president/CEO, Air Paris

Sarah Jindal, senior global analyst, beauty & personal care, Mintel
