The new products include the Aldford table, the Ramsey sofa and loveseat and the Styal desk, each featuring a lacquered finish and a sustainable fabric produced from marble powder among a choice of finishes. The collection features distinctive lines and shapes, and ultimately represents a new vision for the brand, aligned with the automaker's ambitions towards sustainability.

Sustainability, design and furniture

The new furniture designs come from Carlo Colombo and Luxury Living Group in close collaboration with Bentley Design, introducing the new Degrad lacquering and new MARM \ MORE marble powder fabric.

The Degrad lacquering is key to the overall aesthetic of the 2021 Bentley Home Collection, offering a luxury feel that is both customizable and recognizable.

Before the Degrad lacquering can be created, a coat of varnish is hand-applied to protect the wood. A master craftsman must then use airbrushing to apply the color by hand, utilizing the correct dose of lacquer, gradually drawing away from the wood to accentuate the color gradient replicate the exact detailing of the shading.

Finally, a round of polishing is required to give the product body, depth and solidity. Four coats of varnish are then applied before a final round of polishing.

The finish is then available in a variety of options including Deep Ocean, Midnight Walnut, Black Kenya, Dark Shadow, Rust Degrad, Silver Degrad and Bronze Degrad.

MARM \ MORE is an ethical new fabric, developed and patented for Bentley Home. The fabric is sourced and produced in Italy and requires master craftsmen to complete every step on the journey from powder to furniture wrap.

The pieces include the focal point of the collection, the Styal desk, a sleek addition that transforms the work from home experience. The slim and light desk is broken down into four elements, subdivided by a metal profile, which can be covered in either leather or veneer.

The Aldford table is available in both rectangular and circular versions. The design is enhanced by the three layers that make up the tabletop: the underside is lacquered in glossy black, and a metal profile runs around the perimeter.

The Ramsey loveseat is the first loveseat from Bentley Home, an extension of contemporary luxury, while the Ramsey couch's seat is suspended off the floor, making its armrests resemble wings. Both are available in a choice of coverings including Warm Grey Fiddleback Sycamore, Smoked Liquidambar, Burr Walnut root, or alternatively, covered in leather or the marble powder fabric, while Degrad lacquering is also applied to the wood finishes.

Last year, Bentley released a collection of furniture called the Newent Collection, which pulled inspiration from long-established and modernist design, with aesthetics identified as Bentley's (see story).
