The cruise line is continuing to work with global government and port officials in developing its plan for a full return to cruising. The line is currently operating two out of the five ships in its fleet, and scheduling the Seabourn Sojourn to resume service in Europe, where it will spend its summer 2022 season.

"Based on input from our loyal guests and those interested to experience Seabourn for the first time, we revised the restart for Seabourn Sojourn to coincide with peak summer 2022 travel," said Josh Leibowitz, president of Seabourn, in a statement. "We know our guests are eager to see the world with us again, and we look forward to welcoming guests back to Seabourn."

The ship is set to resume in the Mediterranean on June 6, 2022. The ship plans to sail the Western Mediterranean, exploring the French and Italian Riviervas, Spain, Portugal, Gibraltar, Morocco, Malta and the Canary Islands.

With the new restart date for Seabourn Sojourn, the brand is cancelling its 2022 145-day World Cruise originally scheduled for the ship on Jan. 11, 2022 from Los Angeles. The 2024 World Cruise itinerary will aim to make up for the cancelled 2022 excursion, with booking for this cruise available starting October 2021.

Last year, Seabourn saw strong booking volume for its now-cancelled 2022 world voyage, indicating that there was pent-up interest among affluents for cruising as travel opportunities were limited. Seabourn's "2022 World Cruise: Extraordinary Horizons" had already sold more than 50 percent of its segments through the halfway point (see story).
