The brand chose Mr. Page to embody its new expression of elegance due to his keen sense of style and refreshing self-awareness. While his role as the Duke of Hastings in Netflix's series "Bridgerton" launched him into stardom last year, the actor is expected to attract more global attention for his upcoming roles in the films The Gray Man and Dungeons and Dragons.

New elegance

Prior to his Emmy-nominated breakout performance in "Bridgerton," Mr. Page played Chicken George in the 2016 historical drama mini-series "Roots."

He also appeared in Amazon Studio's Emmy-nominated jazz romance Sylvie's Love.

Mr. Page has also established himself as an impactful cultural presence.

He was honored on the 2021 TIME 100 Next list, the magazine's annual list of individuals who are shaping the future of their fields and defining the next generation of leadership.

Mr. Page joins a roster of notable personalities who serve as ambassadors for Longines, including actress Kate Winslett, Eddie Peng, Simon Baker and Chi Ling Lin.

Longines also featured brand ambassadors and professional alpine skiers Marco Odermatt and Loc Meillard in an advertising campaign earlier this year. The collaboration served to link the heritage brand's precision in watchmaking to the skiers' quest for peak performance (see story).
