Limited to 250 units, the Chronomaster Revival Lupin The Third Final Edition features two dials that combine all the elements from both chronographs depicted in the first and last episodes of Lupin The Third's first season. The watch retails for $10,000.

Final edition

In 2019, Zenith was the first watchmaker to produce a watch directly inspired by a Japanese manga and anime series.

In the first episode of the animated Lupin The Third series, which first aired almost 50 years ago, a character, Daisuke Jigen, is shown wearing a watch based on the Zenith A384.

Then, in the final episode of the first series, the character is shown wearing another Zenith chronograph, but with a different "panda" dial that never actually existed.

Inspired by the show's take on Zenith timepieces, the brand turned fiction into reality with the Chronomaster Revival series.

The final edition watch, which is crafted in a 37mm barrel-shaped stainless steel case, combines the black and gilt dial of the first edition and the "panda" dial of the second edition.

It is powered by the El Primero automatic high-frequency chronograph caliber.

Recently, Zenith celebrated three years of its Le Monde Etoil experience with the latest stop of its traveling "A Star Through Time" exhibition in Tokyo. "A Star Through Time" recounts the history of Zenith and the figures who made the Swiss watchmaker what it is today.

With a virtual tour of the exhibition available on the Zenith website, guests from around the world may experience the interactive, immersive exhibition (see story).
