The sales gallery illustrates design detailing that will be present in the 216-unit beachfront residential building in Sunny Isles, Miami, Florida. Additionally, a suite of renderings has also been released, previewing the plans, luxury communal spaces and lifestyle amenities.

"We have applied the same attention to detail that goes into our cars into this very building," said Chris Cooke, product and lifestyle design manager at Bentley, in a statement. "Each space is different, but with distinctive Bentley design cues styled harmoniously throughout."

Bentley is collaborating with property developer Dezer Development and architectural firm Sieger Suarez Architects on the development and design of the luxury residential tower, set to be completed in 2026.

A suite of renders, including communal amenities, is giving consumers a preview of the luxurious shared spaces.

The completed building will be home to a wellness center, cinema, cigar lounge, restaurant and more, available alongside the 216 furnished apartments.

Every residence will have an individual balcony swimming pool and unobstructed views through floor-to-ceiling glass.

The spaces throughout the entire development aim to convey Bentley's sense of harmony.

Diamond-shaped glass panels enhance the building's faade, angled for ideal light refraction, with the same patterns and silhouettes echoed throughout the building, including diamond-shaped tiles on the floor of the lobby.

The diamond motif reflects Bentley's design DNA, a crucial symbol found throughout all of the brand's products and vehicles.

The new sales gallery also houses a large, awe-inspiring sculpture, imagined by Bentley designers in Crewe who had the Miami beachfront in mind. The Bentley speed form sculpture is inspired by the flowing lines and surface definition present in the brand's cars.

"The color of the exterior is a unique paint mixed in the Bentley paint shop and was specially created to come to life in the bright Miami climate whilst enhancing the sculptures form," said Brett Boydell, head of design collaborations at Bentley, in a statement.
