On June 6, the Phantom Series II emerged publicly for the first time, being test run on the streets of Nice. The vehicle is slated to debut globally over the next few months in select countries, including the U.S. during Monterey Car Week.

Nice to ride

At the public debut of the Phantom Series II, Rolls-Royce invited guests around the world to drive and be driven in the new iteration.

The French Riviera is woven into the rich heritage of the automotive brand, as cofounder Sir Henry Royce built a villa in the village of Le Canadel in 1912, where he spent every winter until his passing in 1933.

Rolls-Royce has had a prominent presence in the Côte d'Azur since the 20th century, transporting famous actors, musicians and public figures.

The Phantom Series II, which was announced last month (see story), is an eighth-generation Phantom and includes new visual and aesthetic enhancements.

The headlights feature laser-cut bezel starlights, the grille is illuminated and a subtle change to the Pantheon Grille makes the "RR" badge more visible and prominent.

The latest Phantom iteration will debut in the Americas at Monterey Car Week, which begins on Aug. 12.
