The Fashion Institute of Technology (FIT) is kicking off its annual Future of Fashion Celebration and Honors event with the release of host and honoree lineup details.

This year's evening affair will recognize designer and alumnus Victor Glemaud, as well as supermodel and entrepreneur Karlie Kloss for their respective fashion contributions and industry achievements. Programming slated for May 10 will see current students showcasing their designs as part of the school's Future of Fashion runway show resourcing the next generation of students, event proceeds will benefit the FIT Foundation.

Fashion Forward

New York City's premiere fashion center has revealed that American supermodel Ashley Graham will host the upcoming Future of Fashion Celebration and Honors, during which the Institute's Outstanding Alumni honor will go to Mr. Glemaud, while Ms. Kloss receives the Fashion Icon honor.

Both fashion industry leaders are credited with driving the future of fashion forward on an ongoing basis over the course of their careers.

Notable figures aside, the Institute is tapping longtime partner Macy's to present various student awards at the event.

The U.S. retailer will distribute three Bold Representation Awards, each naming the Best Use of Sustainable Materials, Best Culturally-Inspired Look the award calls for designs inspired by the student's own ethnic heritage (see story) and Best Gender-Neutral Look.
