California-based luxury home furnishings company RH has restored landmark grounds in the American Midwest.

Reimagining one of the most accurate Palladian-style villas ever built in the country, the brand is opening the gates to historic grounds, granting the public first-time access to the 151-acre property. RH Indianapolis, The Gallery at the DeHaan Estate, which features a restaurant, art installations, and an interior design studio, among other attractions, transforms the former home of late German American philanthropist Christe DeHaan, joining one of just a few of the company's new global retail gallery concepts.

"The DeHaan Estate is one of the most magical properties in North America, and we are honored to open its gates to the public for the first time," said Gary Friedman, chairman and CEO of RH, in a statement.

"From the immaculately groomed grounds and tree-lined driveway, to the massive stone terrace and boat dock overlooking the lake and forest, and the perfectly proportioned rooms filled with natural light from the abundance of windows, RH Indianapolis is a place to come and dream, be inspired by the architecture; get lost in the views, enjoy a meal in the grand ballroom or sip a glass of wine while strolling through the gardens."

Midwest makeover

Boasting over 60 rooms, the Indianapolis, The Gallery at the DeHaan Estate is one of RH's largest and most immersive spaces launched to date an official grand opening was held on Nov. 17.

The site arrives after the June landing of RH England, The Gallery at the Historic Aynho Park on a 400-year-old landmark English estate (see story).

Now, visitors of both hubs can browse the RH Interiors, Contemporary, Modern and Outdoor collections as the center additionally provides guests with one-on-one service and a bespoke lifestyle experience.

Entry through a double linden-tree alle driveway previews the degree to which the RH Indianapolis, The Gallery at the DeHaan Estate's design genre complements the ethos of the Californian company.

Hand-forged iron doors and a curved foyer frame the showroom space itself, which spans 42,000 square feet, and marks the relocation of RH's The Fashion Mall at Keystone store.

The building houses Italian-travertine floors and handcrafted touches such as a set of walnut doors manufactured in Paris. Decor is paired with rare antiques, art pieces and other artifacts sourced from around the world, according to the brand.

Though its original identity as a private residence is honored, RH Indianapolis now hosts hospitality touchpoints as well.

The Dining Room, a restaurant featuring a 27-foot groin-vaulted ceiling and a lighting installation from Los Angeles-based glass designer Alison Berger, occupies the grand ballroom.

A Calacatta gold-marble Wine Bar serving limited-production offerings from small Napa Valley vintners can be found within the property's west wing. Guests are welcome to take Champagne strolls through The Lakeside Terrace's classical gardens, boasting views of a 35-acre private lake.

What was once used as a billiard room at DeHaan Estate today contains the RH Interior Design Studio, an interactive spot for clients to gain access to professional design services. Here, state-of-the-art technology and design libraries holding a range of textiles, furniture and lighting finishes are available to shoppers.

Located at 4501 North Michigan Road, RH Indianapolis, The Gallery at the DeHaan Estate operates between 10 a.m. and 9 p.m. from Sunday to Saturday.
