Swiss hotel chain Aman Resorts International is sharing updates on a new arrival.

The company originally announced plans to launch a new hospitality brand three years ago. Today, the world's first-ever Janu property is now accepting reservations, slated to debut in Tokyo in March 2024.

Soulful stay

With a starting rate of over $1,300 per night, the world's first-ever Janu hotel is preparing to open by the spring of next year.

Meaning "soul" in Sanskrit, the sister brand involves a relatively more affordable stay, beating rates at Aman's flagship properties by about 30 percent, according to reports from Bloomberg.

Designed by Pelli Clarke & Partners, Janu Tokyo includes 122 guest rooms spread across eight floors of the Azabudai Hills building's Residence A Tower. Living quarters contain fireplaces, private balconies, floor-to-ceiling windows and interiors that meld traditional aesthetics from both cultures.

Amenities at Janu Tokyo range from eight eateries to a 43,000-square-foot spa and wellness center, aligning with a few of the firm's more recent efforts in the space (see story).

The development housing the inaugural hotel offers green spaces, residences, educational facilities, galleries, offices, luxury retail and dining spots, and is also the site of Japan's tallest skyscraper, which stands at 1,068 feet.

News of Janu Tokyo's renewed opening date follows reports that Aman Group managed to secure $360 million in funding from investors out of the United Arab Emirates (UAE). Leaders have updated the Janu pipeline from three properties, now planning to bring 11 hotels and resorts to life within the next four years.
