A set of high-end villas is soon to arrive at a European resort that remains popular among sporting circles.

Spanish development firm Solvilla is announcing a new partnership with Finca Cortesn, a five-star property touting some of the world's best golfing experiences. The pair has delivered nine new luxury developments just miles away from Marbella, Spain, in the village of Casares on the country's Costa Del Sol, offering quite a few plots that lie just steps from the fairway.

"We are proud to be partnering with the world-renowned Finca Cortesn resort to develop these exceptional luxury villas," said Stacy Welch, partner at Solvilla, in a statement.

"Each will have its own unique style and offer an unrivaled golfing lifestyle in prime Marbella location," Mr. Welch said. "We expect huge demand for these properties, particularly from Scandinavia and European hubs as well as further afield.

"This exciting collaboration will bring a new level of golfing lifestyle residences to the Costa Del Sol region, with a selection of properties situated next to the award-winning golf course."

The Solheim Cup, a biennial women's golf contest featuring contestants from Europe who battle players from the United States, was held on Finca Cortesn's 18-hole golf course in 2023.

Typically reserved for exclusive events, those interested can now gain residential access to the award-winning green, designed by American architect Cabell B. Robinson, as the nine expansive spaces hit the market this year.

Priced between 6 million and 9 million euros, or $6.5 to $9.8 million at current exchange, the private four to six-bedroom and four to eight-bathroom with two or three-level options come custom-built.

The new Finca Cortesn homes bring bespoke interiors to a private enclave on the Andalusian coast. Each features floor-to-ceiling windows and ground floors that open up to a garden, gazebo and pool.

Wellness-driven amenities such as these have proven popular with luxury buyers as of late (see story).
