French beauty brand Guerlain is reviving an esteemed initiative for emerging talents of all ages.

Rooted in a continuous connection to the contemporary artists that design the brand's cases and bottles, the Art & Environment Prize, which awards a residency and exhibition to its winner, was launched last year. Applications for the competition's second edition are now live artists of any discipline, academic background and experience level are encouraged to apply.

Take two

Introduced in collaboration with South Korean artist Lee Ufan (see story), this year's Prize continues to call for modern creations that offer fresh, long-term visions on the relationship between society and the environment.

Guerlain's winner will be revealed at Paris+ par Art Basel in October before embarking on a two-month residency program at the beginning of 2025.

To aid in bringing the laureate's concept to life, the awardee will be provided access to dedicated production space and accommodations in Arles, receiving mentorship and support from a member of the Lee Ufan Arles team.

The 2024 round of the Art & Environment Prize culminates in a solo exhibition show, placing the artist's work on display during the summer at the program sponsor's Lee Ufan Arles museum in Arles, France.

Selection criteria include the artist's career trajectory, the sincerity, relevance, and originality of the proposed project, as well as its alignment with the thematic focus of the Prize.

The deadline for entries, available on the Lee Ufan Arles site, is July 30, 2024. Finalists will be announced in mid-September, followed by interview sessions in early October.
