French luxury fashion resale platform Vestiaire Collective is backing reproductive rights.

Listed in support of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America, shoppers can find 10 pieces on the site from the wardrobe of American actress Laura Dern. Vestiaire Collective is sending proceeds from these sales and an additional donation to the nonprofit.

"To help support reproductive freedom, I've donated a few pieces from my closet to Vestiaire Collective to help raise money for Planned Parenthood," said Ms. Dern, in a statement.

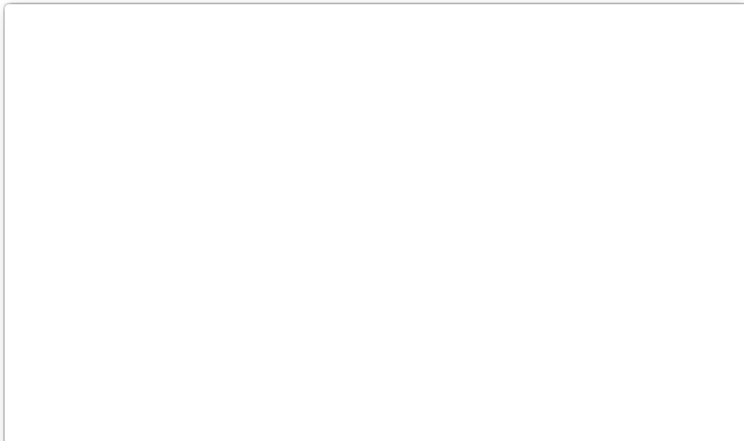

"Everyone deserves healthcare that's free of shame, stigma, or judgment."

Closet care

The special closet sale includes an array of ready-to-wear designs curated by the Academy Award winner.

Ms. Dern aims to reduce the stigma around talking about or receiving sexual and reproductive health care, abortion included.

The issue is one of the biggest hot-ticket topics in the country, especially after the Supreme Court repealed the Roe v. Wade decision in June 2022. As the presidential election approaches, the subject has become even more top of mind for many voters.

Throughout the years, luxury has made its own stance on abortion and reproductive health care. Echoing a portion of their clientele's opinion on the matter, a wave of brands in the sector spoke up following the historic news in 2022 (see story).

Now, Vestiaire Collective continues the conversation.

Ms. Dern's picks include products from fashion houses such as Stella McCartney, Sacai, Gucci, Oscar de la Renta, Missoni and more. They range in price from $58 to $625.

At the time of publication, eight of the 10 selections are already sold out online.
