Luxury Daily

At this exclusive summit organized by this publication at the National Museum of the American Indian across from Manhattan's Battery Park downtown, attendees will get to listen and meet with key executives moving the needle for luxury marketing, retail and media. The conference, whose agenda is below, will be limited to only 200 delegates.

"As pointed out by BCG Consulting Insights, luxury is a $1.3 trillion industry – the size of Australia's GDP, the world's 13th largest economy – so the welfare of such a large influence in the global marketplace is key," said Mickey Alam Khan, editor in chief of Luxury Daily, New York.

"But like any other sector, luxury needs constant tending and caring for it to flourish," he said. "That means consistent practices across product and service quality, controlled distribution, responsive marketing, customer touch points and perception of value. Some luxury brands are holding the line, not succumbing to premium temptation, while a few have convinced themselves otherwise. Regardless, an eye on heritage, quality and customer experience is essential for long-term thriving."

This conference will help luxury marketers establish benchmarks for best practice in brand building, marketing and retail.

Under discussion will be the role of storytelling in maintaining the brand narrative, finding best friends for diamonds, why cookie cutters do not work for luxury property marketing, brand evangelism's role in this noise-fused economy, the state of the luxury business and what motivates today's luxury customer. Key luxury trends, issues and opportunities will also be aired.

Attendees will get access to all presentations made at the event.

The event is priced at $595 for the day, which includes breakfast, lunch and cocktails. Refunds will not be given 72 hours before the event or for no-shows on the day of the conference.

Four Seasons Hotels and Resorts: How Storytelling is the New Defining Luxury Experience

Today's luxury customers are as much into physical goods as they are into flawless experiences whose memories last a lifetime. Indeed, the largest spend category in luxury is travel and hotels, estimated annually at about $355 billion. The Four Seasons Hotels and Resorts brand understands well the motivations of the luxury guest, from the aspiring luxury traveler to the worldly jetsetter. The global slowdown in 2009, however, refocused the hospitality industry to move brand dollars to digital media, especially social where consumers wanted to be part of the brand story. As Four Seasons has discovered, storytelling and engaging content is now key to getting more heads in beds. In this session, attendees will learn:

- ☒ What today's luxury customer expects from experiences
- ☒ The state of the luxury hospitality industry
- ☒ Marketing that works for Four Seasons hotels and resorts worldwide
- ☒ How Four Seasons became a storyteller and a custom publisher of content
- ☒ Tips for how luxury brands that sell experiences can translate them into digital for consumer engagement

Speaker:

Elizabeth Pizzinato, senior vice president of marketing and communications, Four Seasons Hotels and Resorts

Graff Diamonds: Marketing High Jewelry to Today's Consumer

British high jeweler Graff Diamonds knows a thing or two about elegance and style: some of the world's best diamonds have passed through its hands. In addition to diamonds, the marketer sources and polishes gems such as emeralds and rubies, encasing them in rings, earrings, necklaces and watches that sparkle with life and dazzle eyes that behold. Holding quality standards and stoking demand in a competitive world is not easy, but Graff presses ahead with creativity within its stores, online and via its catalogs and magazine. This session will discuss:

- ☒ The state of the luxury jewelry business
- ☒ Graff's positioning within the high-end jewelry market
- ☒ How vertical integration is the core of success with access to inventory
- ☒ The role of stores, catalogs, magazines and print advertising in Graff's story
- ☒ Marketing strategy: focus on select high-end intimate events and experiences for clients

Speaker:

Courtney Smith, vice president of marketing, advertising and communications, Graff Diamonds

Boston Consulting Group: State of the Luxury Business 2013 and Beyond

Evolving consumer behavior requires luxury brands and retailers to adapt, even more so in a global economy where growth lies in emerging markets but the developed countries cannot be ignored. Some key trends are already obvious, such as an emerging middle class trading up and a growing reliance on China to fuel a luxury brand's growth. Still, the recipes of the past will not work. In this session, attendees will learn:

- ☒ How consumer behavior is changing to include experiences, moving from a mindset of “to have” to “to be” with older demographics and millennials
- ☒ The role of geography in driving growth: how an emerging middle class in the BRIC countries plus South Africa is eyeing and buying luxury goods and services
- ☒ Why the United States should not be ignored
- ☒ How new business models are emerging in luxury as the relationship between consumers and brands changes
- ☒ How digital is changing the rules of the game for ecommerce, retail and marketing

The Marketing Revolution

The path to purchase is not linear, but luxury marketers can still direct the journey. This session will discuss how top brands are refining mobile, social and loyalty tactics in the way they engage consumers, providing a holistic experience across digital and in-store experiences. Learn how to connect these meaningful touch points and inspire consumers on their path to purchase.

Belstaff: Redefining a Heritage Brand for a Digital Age

As a brand steeped in its 89-year heritage, Belstaff is vying to achieve a rare balance of being equally as established as it is innovative in manufacturing, marketing and retailing its line of apparel, accessories, footwear and handbags. Since the introduction of the Trialmaster racing jacket in 1948, Belstaff has become the brand to go to for bikers' outerwear. Repositioned two years ago and recently acquired by Swiss luxury conglomerate Labelux, the British brand tests and experiments with marketing so that it can quickly punch above its weight. In this session, attendees will learn:

- ☒ The state of the luxury apparel and accessories market
- ☒ How marketing to men and women differs: defining the triggers
- ☒ The Belstaff case study: marketing and retail
- ☒ The right marketing channels to acquire the contemporary luxury customer

Douglas Elliman Real Estate: The Art and Science of Luxury Property Marketing
The nation's fourth largest real estate company with 4,000 agents in more than 70 offices has spent 102 years servicing its clients' desire for a dream home – great view, large bathrooms, pet-friendly, access to the water and, yes, the right neighbors. New York and Florida are its key markets, with clients flocking from all over the world. Elliman is a full-service real estate firm, offering services spanning sales and rental, retail and commercial, new development marketing, property management, financing and title insurance. Yet the traditional real estate industry is rapidly transitioning, especially as consumers seek more information and experiences from their brokerage firms. In this session, attendees will learn:

- ☒ The new face of luxury property marketing
- ☒ What today's luxury buyer expects from the interaction with the real estate company
- ☒ Why a cookie-cutter approach does not work: high-end properties are all unique
- ☒ How the real estate business has become so visual with videos and content-rich with magazines rivaling leading shelter titles
- ☒ The heightened role of artistic open-house events, public relations, advertising, customized marketing and content in wooing the luxury buyer or renter

Ipsos MediaCT: Understanding Luxury Consumers and Their Decision-Making Process
Getting a handle on the luxury consumer is not easy. Old stereotypes do not apply anymore, as younger consumers are eager to sample luxury goods and services, while the older group seeks out more experiences as rewards for a lifetime of putting shoulder to the wheel. What better source to synthesize luxury brand and consumer data than the acclaimed 36th Annual Mendelsohn Affluent Survey as well as the much-cited Mendelsohn Affluent Barometer tracking survey? This session will address questions such as:

- ☒ Who is today's luxury consumer? Building a profile of today's luxury targets by exploring the best predictors of luxury interest and purchase
- ☒ How can brands best reach these luxury consumers? Exploring the role of digital and traditional media throughout the luxury funnel
- ☒ How do luxury dynamics change across categories? A brief look at luxury in categories such as apparel, travel, automotive and mobile devices
- ☒ How are luxury purchase decisions made? Exploring brand considerations such as quality, design and value, as well as today's multichannel shopping process including showrooming
- ☒ What does the future hold for luxury? Exploring the outlook for 2013 luxury spending with the latest tracking results from Ipsos' luxury interest indices

Speaker:

Stephen Kraus, senior vice president and chief insights officer of Ipsos MediaCT's audience measurement group, and coauthor of "The New Elite: Inside the Minds of the Truly Wealthy"

Donna Karan: Brand Evangelism's Role to Widen the Luxury Customer Base
As one of the trendiest luxury womenswear apparel and lifestyle brands, Donna Karan New York is known for deploying the latest communication tools to keep its customer base engaged year-round. Its use of social media platforms such as Twitter, Facebook, whosay.com and Tumblr are nothing short of democratic in its approach, pushing a lifestyle that is stylish yet classic and so New York. Given the state of the global economy, Donna Karan is doubling down on its branding efforts to maintain ties with not only existing customers but also those who may enter the brand at a later stage. In this session, attendees will learn:

- ☒ Why brand evangelism should trump a singular focus on ROI for luxury marketers

- ☒ Embracing social media to meet luxury consumers wherever they are
- ☒ Donna Karan's approach to brand evangelism
- ☒ The increasingly critical role of Twitter, Facebook, Instagram, whosay.com, Tumblr, Pinterest, Weibo and blogs in shaping the luxury brand's perception
- ☒ Why the mediums are the luxury message

Why It's Not Just the 1 Percent Anymore and Other Luxury Trends, Challenges and Opportunities

It is well documented how marketers and retailers of luxury goods and services mostly thrived in the recent economic slowdown while their main street counterparts struggled to hold on to market share. But demographic changes and evolving tastes are forcing luxury marketers to look anew at their marketing and retail practices. Consumers, even the affluent ones, want a say in the brand's story, thanks to new technology and media. Resistance is futile, as the Borg said. This closing session will feature the full weight and wisdom of its panelists, opining on key luxury issues including:

- ☒ Stepping into Choos: Will Gen X and Gen Y transition smoothly into the new generators of demand?
- ☒ All over the map: Headwinds in China, Japan not back to form, and the prospects of BRICS
- ☒ Old money, old turf: Sustaining customer relationships in Europe and the United States
- ☒ Experiences: The new luxury good?
- ☒ A little more conversation: Online, mobile, social and in constant dialogue – the new face of marketing?
- ☒ Turning the page? Not print advertising
- ☒ What's in store: bricks and clicks
- ☒ Counterfeiting: falling trees in the forest
- ☒ Big is beautiful? So think LVMH, PPR, Richemont, Swatch Group and Labelux
- ☒ Mystique, not mistake: turning brand into product
